INTERSTICES 06
Interstices: Journal of Architecture and Related Arts is an open forum for the dissemination of architectural and art practices and thought. It is a non-profit journal published once a year. To remain independent, Interstices relies upon private support to fund its editorial production. Annual individual sponsorship is available from $100; corporate sponsorship from $1,000; and institutional sponsorship from $3000. Sponsors will receive full acknowledgement of their contribution and a copy of each issue of Interstices for which they are a sponsor.

This issue is supported by:
School of Architecture, The University of Auckland; School of Arts and Design, Auckland University of Technology;
School of Architecture, Unitec Institute of Technology (Institutional Sponsors);
Architectus (Corporate Sponsor);
Pete Bossley, Cheshire Architects Ltd, Jaames Ltd, Andrew Scott Cotton Architects, and Helene Furjan (Sponsors)

Editorial Advisory Board

Australia
Andrew Benjamin (University of Technology Sydney)
Mirjana Lozanovska (Deakin University)
John Macarthur (University of Queensland)
Paul Walker (University of Melbourne)

Canada
Marco Frascari (Carleton University, Ottawa)

Germany
Michael Erthoff and Uta Brandsis (König International School of Design)

Italy
Nigel Ryan (Architect, Rome)

NZ
Mike Austin (Unitec Institute of Technology)
Davd Brown, Laurence Simmons and Allan Smith (The University of Auckland)
Peter Wood (Victoria University of Wellington)

UAE
Bechir Kenzari (United Arab Emirates University)

UK
Jonathan Hale (University of Nottingham)
Anthony Hoete (American University in Beirut, What Architecture, London)

USA
Jonathan Lamb (Vanderbilt University)
David Leatherbarrow and Helene Furjan (University of Pennsylvania)
Mark Goulthorpe (MIT, deCoi Architects Paris)

Executive Editors
A.-Chr. (Tina) Engels-Schwarzpaul, Ross Jenner

Issue Editors
A.-Chr. Engels-Schwarzpaul (tina.engels@aut.ac.nz), Ross Jenner (r.jenner@auckland.ac.nz),
Albert Refiti (albert.refiti@aut.ac.nz)

Design and Layout
Adam Sheffield

Cover design based on an image from the performance PARADISE by Lemi Ponifasio at the Venice Biennale 2003

Production
A.-Chr. Engels-Schwarzpaul, Judy Cockram, Fleur Palmer, Meghan Norodesk, Mark Henlien

ISSN 1170-585X

©September 2005
Published by Enigma, The University of Auckland and Auckland University of Technology, Auckland
Printed by Brebner Print Ltd., Auckland

The Editors invite submissions of articles, reports, books and project reviews, and translations. All correspondence should be addressed to The Editors, Interstices, School of Art and Design, Auckland University of Technology, Private Bag 92006, Auckland 1020, New Zealand. Books for review and advertising should be forwarded to The Editors as above.

Introduction

Refereed papers
Mark Jackson
Impulsive Openness: Boredom and Bio-politics
8

Laurence Simmons
Hegdegger and the Herringbone Cowshed
20

Sarah Treadwell
Animation, the Cat and Escaping Drawing
36

Peter Wood
Architecture = Building + Value: Exploring the Social Purpose of Architectur
44

Albert Refiti
Woven Flesh
53

A.-Chr. Engels-Schwarzpaul
Frontiers of Shame and Repulsion
61

Ross Jenner
What Goes Up Must Come Down: The Combat of Impulses in Italian Futurism and Rationalism
73

Non-refereed Papers, Projects, Reviews, Translations
Marco Frascari
Gee Wiz
84

Deane Simpson
Instinctive Systems
90

Anthony Hoete
Bovine Buildings
96

Reviews of the Fale Pasifika at The University of Auckland

Semisi Fetokai Potaunu
The Tectonic of the Fale
104

Jeremy Treadwell
Chains of Negotiations: Navigating between Modernity and Tradition
110

Marra O’Connor
Review of The Open: Man and Animal
116

Tim Adams (Trans.)
Felix Guattari: Architectural Enunciation
119

Reviews of the Models for Living Exhibition by John Walsh and Peter Barlett
126

John Pule
PARADISE: Looking for Exits. Review of MAU’s performances in Germany and the Netherlands
132

Contributors to this issue

Notes for contributors

136
Introduction
A.-Chr. Engels-Schwarzpaul, Ross Jenner, and Albert Refiti

In February 2004, a series of lectures was announced jointly by the School of Architecture, University of Auckland, and the School of Art and Design, Auckland University of Technology, to re-initiate the critical work carried out between 1989 and 2000 in the Under Construction lecture series and the resulting Interstices publication. In the past, writers and presenters such as the 2003 Pritzker winner Tom Mayne (USA), Mark Wigley (USA), Francesco Venezia and Renato Bizzai (Italy), and Mark Goulthorpe (France, now teaching at MIT) were involved with Interstices, contributing to contemporary local and international debates. The fact that both the lecture series, with its lively and collegial discussions, and the publication then lay fallow for some years was felt as a sad gap by many in the architectural and arts community in New Zealand.

It was Albert Refiti’s entrepreneurial spirit that brought about discussions of a joint venture between the two schools and institutions. Ross Jenner and Laurence Simmons—old Interstices activists—were thus joined by Albert Refiti, Tina Engels-Schwarzpaul, and Mark Jackson to forge a theme and sponsorship and involvement of the Schools of Architecture and Design at Victoria University of Wellington and Unitec Institute of Technology. The journal will remain a forum for the dissemination of research and debate on architectural and art practices. It will continue as a critical platform for the review and discussion of current projects in New Zealand and overseas. The annual lecture series will become, yet again, the point of contact for the interstices, the gaps and fractures within an institution that guide the publication through the next issues. A few, such as Nigel Ryan, have been involved with Interstices already at the very beginning. With Peter Wood, we were able to welcome a colleague from the University of Victoria at our lecture series, who later also submitted his paper for publication. Regarding Interstices & Animal/Impulse, we are very proud to count Marco Frascari (Ottawa), Deane Simpson (Zürich), and Anthony Hoete (London and Beirut) amongst the contributors. For the current lecture series, Genius/Genealogy, we have the pleasure to welcome Andrew Benjamin from the University of Sydney and Jonathan Lamb from Vanderbilt University.

As in the past, Interstices is committed to providing an interface between theory and practice, and writing and drawing, in recognition of different ways of theorizing architecture and the related arts. The issues are composed of a strictly thematic, double-blind refereed part and a lighter and more diverse non-refereed part, which more loosely addresses the theme of an issue through reviews of exhibitions or books and reports on project work in New Zealand and overseas. Thus, Interstices brings together local and international contributors and juxtaposes locally conducted art and design practices, and research and scholarship, with those from outside New Zealand.

It is intended that Interstices will be published at least once a year, with guest editors at other institutions in New Zealand and Australia to bring a greater variety to the journal. We also look forward to the institutional support and involvement of the Schools of Architecture and Design at Victoria University of Wellington and Unitec Institute of Technology. The journal will remain a forum for the dissemination of research and debate on architectural and art practices. It will continue as a critical platform for the review and discussion of current projects in New Zealand and overseas. The annual lecture series will become, yet again, the point of contact between practitioners and academics to develop a critical culture focused on contemporary practice. As in 1989, Interstices is not intended to reaffirm existing normative standards and canons, nor to rest comfortably in the supposed self-sufficiency of the building object, regional identity, composition, nature, function ... but to explore the interstices, the gaps and fractures within an institution that appears solid, secure and fixed.

Interstices is about “the spaces between idea and thing where perfect correspondence is never quite found, demanding a realm of endless negotiation and interpretation that we see as productive” (“Introduction”, Interstices 1).

In the current issue, Animal/Impulse, Mark Jackson opens this realm with “Impulsive Openness: Boredom and Bio-politics”. In a close reading of aspects of Martin Heidegger’s 1929-30 lectures The Fundamental Concepts of Metaphysics, and Giorgio Agamben’s The Open: Man and Animal, the latter’s notion of ‘bare life’ is traced in his reading of Heidegger. For a concern with animality, 'bare life' is an indication of the substantial political conflicts of modernity clustering around animality and humanity.

In “Heidegger and the Herringbone Cowshed”, Laurence Simmons similarly explores the question of animality in the theoretical context of Heidegger's, Derrida's and Agamben's writings. He also engages with a local instance of technological innovation: Ron Sharp's 1952 change of his twelve bail walk-through milking shed to what became known worldwide as the herringbone cowshed. Simmons suggests that while it is urgent to think the animal beyond mechanical paradigms, it is equally important to investigate the blurring lines between human, animal, and machine.

From a very different perspective, Sarah Treadwell and Paul Yeart investigate in the animation Beyond the blurring of lines between animal and architectural movement, which give rise to an unexpected animal/architectural drawing: “Animation, the cat and escaping drawing” traces the porosity between the categories of animal/human/drawing/architecture. The theoretical reference here is Hélène Cixous’ “Without End, No State of Drawingness, no, rather: The Executioner's taking off”, where drawing is somehow always beyond her strength but nevertheless looks back at itself.

Such interest in animal cunning is shared by Peter Wood, who explores the human animal's environmental responsiveness and non-intellectual aspects of aesthetics and architecture. In his paper “Architecture = Building + Value: Exploring the Social Purpose of Architecture” he addresses atavistic factors operating through art in the evolution of human relationships. With the help of such a change in perspective, the oppositions between building and architecture, body and intellect, become unsettled and open up for re-inspection.

“Woven Flesh”, too, is concerned with the space-between of human bodies, animals and ancestors. Albert Refiti engages two motifs: one of the impulse in Albert Wendt's works, and the other of the animal in John Pule's. The two motifs are read against the thematic animal/impulse in an attempt to open up discussion of an architecture of the body in Polynesia. If the body is the dwelling of the ancestors, then the impulse is its long-time resident and the animal its temporal lodge.

Dispersed and difficult to control, impulses are also historically contingent. In “Frontiers of Shame and Repulsion”, A.-Chr. Engels-Schwarzpaul, Albert Refiti and Ross Jenner, he reflected on his 1995 design for his father's house on Motiti Island and its relationships with his own, highly mobile life in architectural designing and teaching.

Maria O'Connor provides a tantalising review of one of the key texts informing this issue, Giorgio Agamben's book The Open: Man and Animal. Rather than (or over and beyond) explicating the text, or giving a relatively fixed account, O'Connor appeals to those readers who will benefit from Agamben's ethico-political stance in relation to their own projects, through an active and personal engagement with the text.

Finally, a translation of Félix Guattari's “L'énonciation architecturale” by Tim Adams, “Architectural Enunciation”, shows how the French psychotherapist and activist applied his considerable conceptual apparatus to the problem of architecture. This was a subject dear to his heart, about which he often wrote. It is strange that this important work has been so long overlooked, especially given the attention paid by architectural theorists to the work of his collaborator, Gilles Deleuze. This translation goes some way to address this oversight.